

SHA RA KU MONO

Cooking Knives

Japanese traditional beauty expressed by contemporary sense

As one of our important pattern policies, we adopted eye-catching square pattern in our knives explaining high cutting quality. These squares bear a close resemblance to Japanese sword and at the same time to urban windows.

Monobloc formed blades and handles are so simple and sanitary that it is easy to handle for both amateurs and professionals.

Not being too addicted to design, we persisted to convenience of handling.

Cast-Iron Casserole & Sauce Pan

This combination cast-iron pot and tableware piece was born from the traditional art of Nanbu Tekki in Iwate Prefecture. (Nanbu Tekki is a traditional style of ironware made of steel from northern Japan.) This piece, with its unique yet highly functional design, represents the perfect harmony between sturdy craftsmanship and excellent design - a hallmark of Japan. Cast-iron pots, due to their thickness and construction, can effectively transfer heat to any ingredient while sealing in all the flavor and nutrition. Additionally, a cast-iron pot can be used on an IH (induction-heating) cooking heater. The fully integrated, one-piece construction of this combination casserole-saucepan prevents the handle from breaking, and cleaning is very easy. The concave, stainless lid can even be used as a tray. Simply place the food on the lid, and you have the perfect dish for serving at the table. The design of this pot has, in fact, earned it a place in the catalog of the Museum of Modern Art (MOMA) in New York.

Materials: Cast-iron pot, 18/8 stainless-steel lid
(18% chromium, 8% nickel)
Surface treatment: Heat-resistant coating
Manufacturer: Oigen Co., Ltd.

Cerami Bowl

These porcelain dishes can be used to serve both Japanese and Western foods. For example, the design of Chikudouen cups makes them ideal for Japanese tea, coffee or even sake. The original spiral patterns on the Chikudouen series conjure up the image of handcrafted porcelain on a potter's wheel. The polygonal, oval plates and bowls are functional yet stylish, offering different aspects of visual appeal in collaboration with the different foods placed atop or within them.
